

Every year for the past 15 or so years, the Littleton Cultural Council has sponsored the 4th of July Town Picnic. As part of the picnic, indeed, as the main attraction, there has been a concert presented from the gazebo of Fay Park. Some years we have been lucky in our selection, other years have left something to be desired. This year we were fortunate to have asked Paul Combs and The Pocket Big Band to entertain townspeople, and entertain they did!

I can highly recommend Paul and his band, everyone was friendly and professional, and the music was first class from the robust opening chords to the lilting songs to the enthralling diversity of pieces played. The music filled the park and set the tone of the picnic enthralling the audience and even drawing in passersby. There were many an unsolicited comment about how this was the best music ever at the Town Picnic.

The Littleton Cultural Council is already planning to have Paul Combs and The Pocket Big Band back to a future picnic. In the meantime, you should consider having them to your event—you will glad you did!
